Modal Auxiliaries

Use each modal auxiliary in a sentence. A sample sentence has been provided for you to complete in your sentences.

Could - sample: I could play soccer or kick back at night.

Will - sample: I will pick up my paper script off the floor when I'm done.

Would - sample: I would buy that if the price was cheaper.

Might - sample: I might want to trade my dessert for your sandwich.

Should - sample: You should eat all of your vegetables.

Notice, that after each modal auxiliary there is a verb. Circle each modal auxiliary in each sentence above with a red crayon. Underline the verb with a blue crayon.

In your own words, construct some sentences that prove what you just learned.

Modal Auxiliaries

ELACC4.L.1.c. Use modal auxiliaries (e.g., can, may, must) to convey various conditions.

I CAN use modal auxiliaries to convey various conditions.

A modal auxiliary is a special kind of helping verb. It is used with a main verb to convey various conditions or functions. Modals (modal auxiliary verbs) are used to show ability, possibility, willingness, intention, obligation, and necessity. They are also used to ask permission, make requests, and give suggestions. Can, could, may, might, shall, should, will, would, and must are modal auxiliaries.

A modal can have more than one function depending on how it is used in the sentence.

Modal Auxiliary	Function
may / might (May / might is used in formal language)	May – possibility, also permission Might – possibility
can / could	Can and could – ability, offer, possibility, certainty, intention, suggestion shall / should (Shall / should is used in formal language)	Shall – when permission is given or done obligate Should – suggestion, possibility will / would	Will / would – probability, willingness, intention, request, offer, intention
must	Must – necessity, possibility, certainty
